

How Mitt Romney Feels About Improving Opportunities for Latino Families

“My own view is, you know, a lot of people just come here, or come across, or walk across the border, that have no skill, no education, and are looking for a free deal.”

– Mitt Romney [Keene, New Hampshire town hall, 8/24/2011]

- Mitt Romney has shown two faces, one face to the Hispanic community and another completely different one to everyone else. [Huffington Post, 1/24/2012]
- Romney has said he cares about our children, but time and time again he promises to veto the DREAM Act that would open educational opportunity for young Hispanics. [ABC News, 12/31/11]
- He promoted the ugly notion of “self-deportation,” a radical right strategy that aims to purge America of the 11 million undocumented immigrants in our country. [Washington Post, 1/28/2012]
- Romney praised Arizona’s anti-immigration laws as a “model” for the nation.” [Washington Post, 2/23/2012]
- Romney also trumpeted the endorsements of an array of anti-immigrant standard-bearers, from Kris Kobach to Lamar Smith, Jan Brewer to Pete Wilson. [America’s Voice, 2/07/2012; Washington Post, 2/26/2012]
- Romney proposed sending undocumented immigrants back to their home countries in as little as 90 days. [2008 Republican debate, 1/30/2008]
- As governor, Romney opposed in-state tuition for children of undocumented immigrants. [2012 Republican debate, 9/22/2011]

“I think our position on English in our schools and in our nation is the same, which I believe English should be the official language of the United States.”

– Mitt Romney [2012 Republican debate, 1/28/2012]

